Brokers bask in summer leasing boom

Seth Pinsky said that the city must offer more affordable office space to attract the small companies and start-ups that are vital to its future. Speaking at a forum hosted by ABS Partners Real Estate, the former president of the New York City Economic Development Corporation, now executive vice president of RXR Realty, called for a balance in developing more housing and office space while underscoring the need for strong economic development planning. "There needs to be affordable office space for the small companies and start-ups we talk so much about attracting to the city," Pinsky said. "If we don't have those jobs then the housing issue is irrelevant."
